Roger Wright Brings Decades of Experience to new Role as Plano's Chief Information Officer

Roger Wright, a 39-year veteran in Information Technology, Project Management, Operations, and Leadership, is the City of Plano's new Chief Information Officer.

Roger comes to Plano from the City of Fort Worth, where he served as Interim Director/Chief Technology Officer since 2018 and Assistant IT Director since 2015. He worked in the private sector for 34 years, including positions at FedEx Express and Services for 19 years.

Roger attended the University of Memphis and Chichton College in Memphis, where he graduated with a Bachelor of Science (cum laude) in Organizational Management.

As Chief Information Officer, Roger leads a team instrumental in earning Plano recognition as a Top Ten U.S. Digital City by the Center for Digital Government. The annual survey honors cities using technology to challenge social challenges, enhance cybersecurity and improve transparency. The Center cited Plano as "serving as a great example of how a city can leverage technology to increase performance and reduce costs."

The City of Plano welcomes Roger to our Team.
